Mobile chests an attraction during the winter holidays in Lublin

During the winter holidays in Lublin, the local branch of the IPN organized the event “Winter Holidays with IPN.” More than 600 people from the city and the county took part. These included organized groups from schools and kindergartens, as well as individual participants. One of the attractions was mobile chests featuring immersive historical education.

Educational activities during the holidays

The Lublin branch of IPN shows how to combine fun and learning in practice. Here it is not just a slogan. The activities were organized for children and young people in a safe, attractive, and engaging way. Participants had the opportunity to try games and activities requiring concentration, patience, manual skills, and the ability to remember information.

The activities were conducted in various ways so that participants would not feel bored. In addition to board games and manual activities, there were also sessions using educational video games and applications. The latter were presented on mobile chests with immersive historical education.

Throughout the entire event, the chests were placed in a space open to participants. Access to the attractions was free, allowing anyone who wanted to take part in immersive historical education to do so. Participants played and explored, having fun and learning with great interest, engaging both individually and in groups. For those who preferred to watch their peers compete, televisions connected to the chests were set up, allowing them to comfortably cheer on the players and observe their actions in the games and applications.
